OF WARTIME RELICS

Bells and Momentoes of Great
Conflict Will Be Properly Preserved.

GATHERED FROM ALL COUNTRIES

Smithsonian Institute Already Busy
Getting Together Immense Collection.

World's Washington Bureau.

WASHINGTON, March 17.—Officials of the new national museum, which is one of the show places of the United States capital, will be here tomorrow for the installation of the collection of mementoes of the war which will form the most important war collection ever exhibited at the world's Smithsonian Institute. American experts have been working on collecting the material for the museum ever since the signing of the armistice last November.

This collection has been made for the purpose of preserving and exhibiting for the benefit of the public a series of objects graphically illustrating the military and naval activities of all the countries engaged in war—the United States, allies, and its enemies—and will in addition to the military and naval features include foods and other economic features. It is pointed out in those engaged in the work of preparing this material that the monetary value of such a museum collection when once assembled should be over-estimated, either from the popular or scientific point of view.

Reminders of the Conflict.
The collection, it was announced today, will consist principally of the following general classes of material, but may be expanded to cover others also:

First, military and naval decorations and medals, including types of military decorations, medals and badges awarded to the officers and enlisted men of the army and the navy for service prior to and during the years of the conflict.

Second, commemorative medals, including all medals commemorating notable events during the progress of the war, and other numismatic material issued during the war, including medallions souvenirs of all kinds.

Third, military and naval service insignia, including all types of devices showing the different ranks and branches of the service.

Fourth, individual military and naval equipment, including the equipment of the individual enlisted men of the various branches of the service such as clothing, arms and other paraphernalia.

Fifth, general military equipment, including tanks, field and machine guns, and other objects employed or used by the military squads and organizations rather than by individual soldiers.

Sixth, air service equipment, including airplanes and other accessories of this branch of the war activities.

Seventh, general naval equipment, including models of ships, naval guns and types of other war paraphernalia employed by the navy in the prosecution of hostilities.

Collection of Mementoes.

Eight, mementoes of persons, including relics of noted individuals serving with the army or the navy or otherwise identified with the war activities.

Ninth, mementoes of events, including relics of events of special note occurring during the war.

Tenth, pictures, maps, books, pamphlets, manuscripts and other objects of the same character relating to the progress of the war.

Eleventh, material as outlined above, particularly closely in character to that which is now being assembled by the British Imperial war museum, which recently was established to preserve museum material relating to the war. The initial installation of the national museum's war collection was made last week in the arts and industries building of the institution. It is said that the entire collection will be placed in the new building, as soon as it is completed, which will be sometime in April.

Tulsa Banker Who Drove Truck
on Battle Front Nearing Home

J. ARTHUR BULL

J. Arthur Bull, director of the Exchange National bank, who left Tulsa about a year ago to go to France with the Y. M. C. A. service and who was on the battle front when a truck he was driving hit a mine, causing him to lose his legs.

A truck of the time and driven by a supply truck has arrived in New York and is expected home within the next few days. Mr. Bull, who has been with the American expeditionary forces in France since the beginning of hostilities, and not being permitted to go to the front, has been fighting at the Y. M. C. A. service ranks as field secretary in order to get a smell of the front powder, ate for the first few months that he was over seas he was right up on the battle front near his fighting boy. When there was no time to get a supply truck the Tulsa banker brought into action the expert engineer he had in driving a big pleasure car about the town and volunteered for the job. For weeks he manned the big motor on the rough battlefield.

He has had about as much experience as the average over-seas soldier and life may seem tame to him when he gets back to his desk at the Exchange bank for black robes told tales of war and suffering. A gentle smile stole over his face. He stepped up into his chair to come right up into my mouth. Then this sonnie was almost smothered out by a tear. I talked and mused to myself concerning the past in such a way that people must have thought I was alienated. It seemed that life had never been so full, so interesting, so good to live.

And the Ladies—Bless Them.

The young ladies strolled along with their mothers, and they surely did look heavenly so slender, so simple, such delicate, complexioned girls, with soft, delicate, feminine features, like little puppies—no danger now, la guerre est finie.

Washington, March 17.—Sixty-five national agencies called together by the council of national defense organized today the emergency committee on employment for soldiers and sailors, as a step toward filling the gap caused by demobilization of 80 per cent of the field force of the United States employment service for which congress failed to provide funds.

The committee on plans was appointed, which immediately obtained information to work being done and prepare comprehensive plans of operations.

Groveson H. Jackson, Director of the council, is chairman, the other members being Col. Arthur W. Moore, special assistant to the secretary of war; John H. Ital, town of Boston; and E. H. Green,

They have heavens faces and bodies and manners, but are of the world, nevertheless. They are not constantly shamed. They are not constantly aggravated because of an apprehension that the world is coming to an end. They are not arrimous. They strive to please those with whom they associate. They do not fear those whose eyes are miles above their neighbors. They are not haughty, neither are they common or ordinary. All accustomed to piety, innocence, courtesy, consideration of their fellow men, with after-banishment of none, they cultivate amenities and assimilate every particle of itself to assimilate every particle of itself. There is perfect liberty. People as they please in regard to purely personal matters, but they try to do in such a way as not to disturb and offend their neighbors. Each after his own liking. Every one chases his own phantom, follows his own prophecies and pleasures. They do not throw stones at each other. Whole-hearted, tolerance, harmony, benevolence and good will pervade.

Socialization Bill Jasses.

COPENHAGEN, March 17.—The German national assembly adopted a bill on Thursday concerning the socialization of factories and also passed a measure regulating the coal industry, according to advices from Weimar.

To Mediate in Strike.

BUENOS AIRES, March 17.—Sir Reginald T. Tower, the British minister, will act as mediator in the port strike. The minister conferred at length with President Irigoyen today and the president accepted his offer of mediation.

Religion Wakes Up.
The awakening of the women seems even more pathetic and demands the most pitiful sympathy. Men seem to have more time to reflect, more time to consider. The cathedrals again taking on their divine coloring, their more sublime and reverential embellishments, their accustomed silence and awe-inspiring characteristics. Invite the devout in greater numbers. Men have more time to think of higher and nobler things. They are beginning to give more of their time to God in praise and devotion and mercy and thanks giving.

The writer of this dissertation happens to be situated in the historic, quaint little town of Blois. It was Sunday afternoon. The commander of the post provided comment and distraction for the throngs and multitudes who had come out of their hibernation in the form of a well-blended program of delightful music. The band was stationed in the plaza of the city, just before the imposing chateau, where Francis I and Henry II and Henry III the Poetry of Life, and Katherine de Medici loved to come and gloat over the glorious panorama that the towers of the historic palace affords. The windows of that old castle were filled with enthusiastic admirers of the sons of America, and the hearts and minds of all seemed to sink back into those peaceful and glorious surroundings which seemed to reflect the times when men lay the chivalrous parts of gentlemen with impunity—for the men who loved courage and brawn in past ages sold themselves to the gentler element for a little firmer hold to keep the wolf from the door.

Then the main drag—the long, most prominent street of the town—was thronged with masses of beautiful women, and elegant young Frenchmen who had returned from the zone of the armies to pass a vingtaine de jours with their loved and respected ones. As I moved along the streets I saw them down that way, thinking, thinking, thinking of what was behind the divine artfully rounded but father and foreheads and those clear, pure almost universally deep blue eyes, casting glances which seemed to invite sympathy and comradeship. I looked with mingled pride and remorse upon the widows, whose long, flowing veils and neat, clear, well cared
